

Fall 2009

Dear Friend,

I write this letter of recommendation for Jeremy Farmer with mixed emotions. While I am thrilled with God's leading him to the field of Cambodia and for the visible and dynamic model it provides for our student body, I am saddened that we will not have him here as a full-time faculty member. I speak as a college administrator and as a father of a present student. Jeremy has been incredibly strong as a theologian, teacher, example, and "life touching life" disciple maker. His wife Bonnie Ruth has been a sweet and beautiful completion to his life. I do not think it would be possible to give too high of a recommendation.

Jeremy is a very capable man and has the necessary credentials to teach at the college and graduate level, but he is able to communicate at all levels. Our students love him. His peers count him as an invaluable team member. But he is also a very humble man and models a God-dependence that is refreshing. He understands the importance of the local church and is faithful to it. It is our prayer that we will be able to stay connected with him in the days ahead as we continue to train students and encourage them to foreign fields. Please feel free to give me a call if you would like to speak further.

Your friend and fellow servant,
